Vascular Biology The vascular system is the network of blood vessels in the body that plays a vital role in the delivery of nutrients and oxygen to cells and removal of wastes. In higher vertebrates, the vascular system comprises two main types of structures: the microvascular endothelial cells that line the interior of all blood vessels, and the macrovascular endothelial cells that line all the venous and lymphatic vessels. The blood vessels of the heart and brain have a type of endothelial cell known as the cardiomyocyte and the neuroglial cell, respectively. Atherosclerosis Atherosclerosis is a condition in which plaques of the wall of a blood vessel gradually form and build up on the inner surface of the vessel. These plaques can harden and narrow the vessel, creating areas of stenosis, which in turn cause the blood to clot and form a blood clot that then can block the blood vessel. Atherosclerosis is one of the leading causes of coronary artery disease and is the main cause of carotid artery disease, aortic aneurysm, and stroke. Heart Disease Heart disease is one of the leading causes of death worldwide, accounting for nearly a third of all deaths. In developed countries, it is mainly heart attack and stroke. There are two main types of heart disease: Coronary Artery Disease (CAD) and Congestive Heart Failure (CHF). Malignant Vasculopathy Malignant vasculopathy is a rare disease in which abnormally large blood vessels form and grow. These abnormal blood vessels, called neoplasms, may form in the lungs, central nervous system, eyes or heart. Malignant tumors are capable of spreading through the blood and lymph systems. The vascular system transports the blood away from the tissues, so malignant tumors need to grow along the interior of the vessel. The tumor then grows larger than the blood vessel supplying the tumor, so blood leaks from the tumor causing bleeding.
